

By Jay Howell, James Dirschberger, Andreas Trolf and Dani Michaeli

Show concept

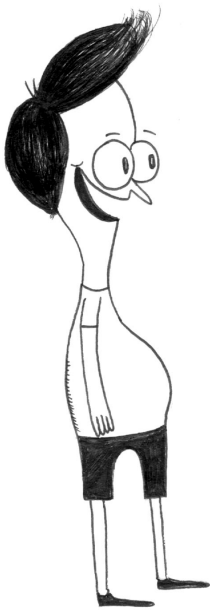

Sanjay is an impressionable 12-year old boy who lives with his parents in the town of Sunny Meadows (formerly known as Runny Meadows). Sanjay was once a studious and dutiful nerd but realized that something was missing in his life. Sanjay's parents want him to become a man of science like his father, Vijay, a brilliant inventor, but, although Sanjay would hate to disappoint his parents, he doesn't want to follow in his dad's footsteps. Vijay often leaves all sorts of crazy inventions lying around and one day Sanjay accidentally zaps his pet snake, Craig, with a talking-ray. Much to Sanjay's surprise, the talking-ray works and turns Craig into a totally radical dude and his new best friend. Craig happens to be the only one who recognizes Sanjay's potential and decides to help his friend escape his nerdy past and move on to a totally awesome future. With Craig's help, Sanjay decides to become a rebel (although to Sanjay, rebellion doesn't mean you have to be hurtful, inconsiderate, or even late with your homework.), and he's willing to do just about anything as long as it's rebellious or cool. Whether that means filling the City Hall fountain with detergent in order to do tons of his family's laundry at once or riding a giant zip-line across town while wearing a tutu, Sanjay doesn't bat an eye. The two decide that they must keep Craig's talking a secret from all grown ups, for fear that a talking snake will be taken away by scientists and experimented on. When he's not busy helping Sanjay, Craig, who is a master of disguise and can easily pass as human, lives a life of adventure and leisure. Craig secretly (and poorly) teaches Sanjay all his inept life lessons, and we see that Craig also has a lot to learn from Sanjay, things that aren't taught amongst the reptiles such as loyalty, friendship, and don't eat rodents. They goad each other on, neither one of them worrying about the consequences of their actions, inspiring each other to ever bigger and bigger heights of zaniness. Craig enjoys how far Sanjay is willing to go to achieve his goals; he's impressed by the little dude's total commitment. In return, Sanjay challenges his friend, such as when Craig dared Sanjay to eat a whole box of French pastries so Sanjay (jokingly) dared Craig to eat something bigger and Frenchier and Craig ate Maurice (temporarily).

Setting

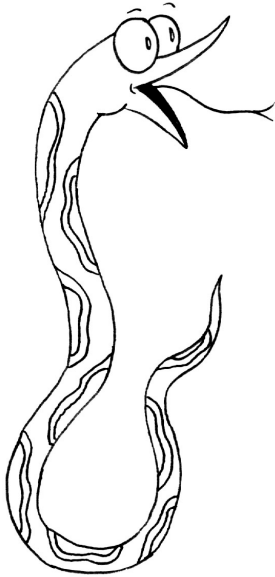

Sunny Meadows is the once affluent but now lower-income suburb just outside of a mid-sized mid-western city. Most of the major industries and factories have shuttered or moved on, so there is more empty space than there are occupants. This gives the kids a wide, if run-down area to explore and/or accidentally destroy.

Characters

Sanjay Singh is an awkward and nerdy kid who decides to rebel against his nerdy predilections and looks to his best friend (and pet snake) Craig for guidance. Sanjay is excited to have such an amazing and confident friend and together they are always coming up with new and exciting adventures, such as when Sanjay and Craig join the rodeo and Craig masquerades as a lasso. Sanjay's an abstract thinker, which helps him dream big but doesn't help with execution. More often than not, Sanjay and Craig's plans go hilariously wrong due to Craig's poor grasp of logic and Sanjay's lack of planning. Mainly Sanjay is a good li'l dude who means well. He hates to disappoint anyone and both Craig and Vijay use this to opposite effect. However, Sanjay's enthusiasm is infectious and when he and Craig are planning something, his friends are always eager to pitch in (they also hope to share in the eventual glory). Sanjay is by no means dumb or dull-witted. In fact he's very ambitious, he just has trouble with the follow-through. His ideas are pure inspiration; the enthusiasm is sky high and the commitment is 100%, but Sanjay lacks focus, discipline, patience or thoroughness.

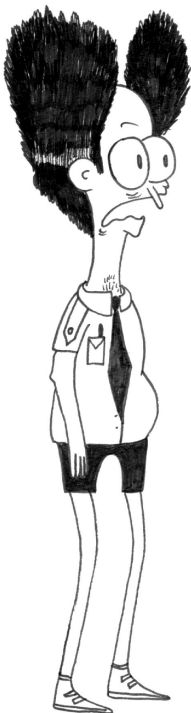

Where other children see a rusty slide, an old plastic tarp and a garden hose; Sanjay sees the tools needed to build his own water park. Unfortunately, he doesn't see the inevitable mud swamp it will become. Sanjay's parents overestimate their son's level of maturity and responsibility by a country mile, and they often leave him alone with complicated instructions on everything from preparing their dinners to auto maintenance, household repairs, aiding in Vijay's experiments and more. This leaves Sanjay and Craig with a lot of free time on their hands since they are frequently unsupervised. Sanjay also has a keen desire to be in a gang with the Dickson twins, the most awesome and rebellious kids in town, even though their gang is comprised solely of the siblings. Sanjay has a crush on his friend, Megan, but he is too shy to admit it.

Craig is Sanjay's talking pet snake and best friend. He is 100% convinced of his own coolness, even to the point of self-delusion and has an inflated ideal of 1970s macho (think: Burt Reynolds mixed with Spiccoli). It's hard to tell what's true and what's not in his stories about having been an amazing actor or once having sailed solo around the world. Thus Sanjay sometimes experiences a little awe at Craig's accomplishments. Craig's history and age are a mystery but mentally and emotionally, he's like a 14-year old (just old enough to feel slightly cooler than the other kids). He loves to affect a "been there, done that" attitude that conveys a worldliness and authority. Craig enlists Sanjay as his protégé and considers him a little brother as well as best buddy, claiming he's doing Sanjay a giant favor, but secretly he thrives off being a mentor. Occasionally, Craig's love of a good time will cause him to space out and forget that he promised to help Sanjay on an important project. In those rare instances when he lets his best friend down, Craig is filled with shame. He thrives off Sanjay's adulation. Only Sanjay and his close friends know that Craig can talk. (There are no other talking animals in town.) Whenever they are caught talking to each other, Sanjay and Craig routinely claim that Sanjay is an aspiring ventriloquist or they merge together and Craig hides out as one of Sanjay's body parts or a clothing item. Craig is also a master of disguise and can easily pass as human, which he often does with hilarious results. Or sometimes he just pretends he's a normal, non-talking pet snake. Also, mysteriously enough, Craig has an impressive collection of crushed velvet suits in pastel colors and other outdated clothes he's overly proud of, as well as a rusty Trans Am on blocks he refers to as "Elaine". Outwardly, Craig shows very little self-awareness but when he's alone (or, possibly, only with Megan) he occasionally betrays a hint that he's not as awesome or confident as he makes himself out to be. Craig has a sensitive underbelly and he can experience a forceful sense of denial if challenged or told, "You can't do that, you're a snake." Mostly, however, Sanjay and Craig are buddies who love hanging out and often get into a bit of trouble. While Sanjay is at school, however, Craig has his secrets, and no one, not even Sanjay, knows what he gets into sometimes.

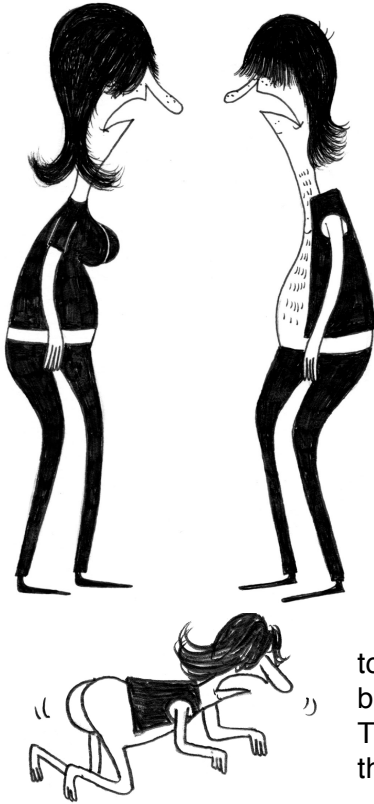

Megan Princess Sparkles is the smart, cute girl who lives down the street from Sanjay and Craig. She might be mistaken for the most level-headed member of Sanjay and Craig's friends, if you can call any of them level-headed at all, but that doesn't mean she talks them out of any of their crazy plans. If anything she escalates the nonsense. If Craig dares Sanjay to eat his molted skin, Megan would insist on stopping him... until he slathers it in hot sauce. Megan spends a lot of time being dragged around by her mother to child beauty pageants. Megan's mom, Starla, is a typical Midwestern stage mother who attempts to micro manage every aspect of her daughter's life. She's deaf to Megan's dislike of the beauty pageant circuit and forces her daughter into the life that she wanted for herself. While Megan is usually too smart to fall for all of the compliments and preening that goes along with the pageants, she sometimes falls prey to her mother's flattery and at rare times even looks down her nose at the other kids. Starla, however, isn't an entirely unsympathetic character—she loves her daughter fiercely. Megan loves her mom, too, but just hates the stupid rigors Starla puts her through. Megan has to sneak out to do homework because her mom says it gives her "study lines" and Starla gets disappointed with Megan's good grades because that means she must not be practicing her pageant walk. Megan has a huge crush on Sanjay, but, like him, is too shy to admit it. Sometimes Sanjay lets her down, but she inevitably forgives him and knows he really means well. Megan is practical, tough, and usually unconcerned with being cool or popular. Megan is fascinated by animals, especially snakes, and is keenly interested in Craig. Betraying her girly exterior, she's mostly interested in really gross stuff and asks Craig a lot of embarrassing questions like, "When's molting season?" and "What was it like to hatch out of an egg?" Craig finds this to be too personal and is uncomfortable with Megan's questions, claiming these things are private. However, when no one else is around, Megan and Craig are able to confide in each other.

MR. NOODMAN is the family's next-door neighbor, so when one of Sanjay and Craig's backyard stunts goes wrong (and they always do) the shrapnel tends to land in his yard or on his house. Mr. Noodman is a retired convenience store security guard, bachelor, and self-appointed commander of the neighborhood watch. He's also a nervous wreck who's terrified of snakes. Think: Richard Simmons with an acute anxiety disorder. Noodman has a "No snakes" sign on his lawn and every bad moment in his life has involved snakes. In fact, many totally random moments in his life have involved snakes and Noodman has multiple flashbacks of bad snake-related memories. Noodman freaks out if he sees anything that even looks like a snake: he has terrible suspicions about the garden hose, doesn't wear socks, and smashes electrical cords, all while talking to himself to bolster his courage. A talking snake is his worst nightmare and Noodman is the only adult who suspects that Craig can talk. It drives him crazy that he's unable to prove it. He spends most of his time spying on Sanjay and Craig. Likewise, Craig is totally offended by Noodman's snake-phobia so he also spies constantly on Noodman, sometimes hiding in his house pretending to be the handle to the vacuum cleaner or hiding in the fruit bowl dressed in a banana peel—only increasing Noodman's anxiety and paranoia. Craig is building a vast dossier on Mr. Noodman, charting his comings and goings with a meticulous eye for detail, and is amassing a collection of video tapes and field recordings.

THE DICKSON TWINS, Scabs and Sandy, and their baby brother Richard, are the baddest and most rebellious kids in town. They ride a motorcycle with a side car which has an additional side car. Their gross and strange behavior freaks out the adults and they have a total disregard for anyone's feelings or safety. Sanjay wants to be in their gang, the Tuff Skullz. No one is quite sure where they live, how old they are, or where their parents are, but they love to mention that their mom used to date Remington Tufflips. Together they act as a cohesive bully-unit, although there's a definite hierarchy at work. Sandy is the obvious leader and Scabs is her goon. Scabs mirrors Sandy. He takes his duties as twin so seriously he just repeats what she says, but really he's a pale shadow of his smart, powerful sister. Imagine a photo copy of a copy of a copy of a few copies off Sandy and you get Scabs. On the other hand, Baby Richard is secretly a crafty, wily genius (as evidenced when Craig discovers him in the sewers as King of the Rats). There's also a weird ambiguity in their relationship to Sanjay and Craig. Usually, they are antagonistic but they've been known to team up with anyone if they're bored enough. They also frequently dicker and squabble amongst themselves, so sometimes they can be played off one another.

MAURICE LETTUCE is one of Sanjay and Craig's best friends, but in reality he's not a 12-year old kid at all. He's actually a 30-year old former spy and French Legionnaire now hiding out in Sunny Meadows disguised as a foreign exchange student. Maurice is an accomplished spy who has fully embraced his role as a kid and enjoys his newfound childhood. Sometimes, he lapses into bitterness or nostalgia, but mostly he's just as ready for a good time as any middle schooler. Having been an outcast his whole life, mostly due to his diminutive stature, he finds much needed companionship in the gang. Maurice has always been drawn to danger, which is why he became a spy and it's also why he likes Sanjay and Craig. He gets why they are great. Sometimes, if Maurice is in a mood, he finds their hare-brained schemes tiresome but his maturity and spying experience often save the day. He speaks many languages and is an expert at picking locks and other spy skills. This is not to say that Maurice is any cooler than the others and he's frequently embarrassed and/or frustrated when people misunderstand his heavy French accent. Only Craig knows Maurice's terrible secret.

Hector Flannagan is the fifth member of the group of friends. The Flannagans are Maurice's host family, so Hector and Maurice are practically inseparable and they'd both follow Sanjay and Craig to their deaths. In contrast to Maurice, Hector is very gullible and implicitly trusting, but he's also possessed of freakish super-human strength which is frequently exploited in the aid of the gang's wild schemes. Hector is just glad to be a part of things, even if it means being used as a glorified pack mule or roadie. Hector is also easily fooled by Craig's various disguises (just like grown-ups are). Craig loves to treat Hector like an errand boy, but Hector just loves the attention.

Vijay and Darlene Singh are Sanjay's parents. Vijay is a brilliant but absent-minded scientist from India. He's constantly trying to come up with the next great invention, but he's easily distracted, which is why at work he is usually assigned the lamest parts of the high tech designs, like if his company is building a robot, Vijay will be in charge of the cup holder. Darlene is a sweet Midwestern Mom with the annoying habit of smothering her only son with too much affection. They're caring and always well-meaning, if a bit overbearing but in different ways. Vijay wants his son to become an inventor as well, so that they can start a family business, but he doesn't always "hard sell" the idea. He's fond of telling Sanjay he can be anything he wants when he grows up; either an engineer or a doctor. Vijay is a supportive dad, but even that occasionally makes Sanjay feel the pressure. And if Vijay feels that Sanjay is misbehaving or not living up to expectations, he won't get angry. It's much worse. He will tell Sanjay he's "disappointed" and thereby really knock the wind out of son's sails. Darlene became a nurse, in part, to help herself overcome her own hypochondria. She's intensely concerned about Sanjay being exposed to germs. She pushes him to bundle up, wear a hat or apply sunscreen even while indoors. Darlene is always ready with a bandage or an iron lung, whatever cure is needed. Vijay and Darlene constantly overestimate how smart and responsible their son is and usually treat him as an adult. But despite Darlene's intense concern, she knows her tendency is to smother Sanjay so she overcompensates and pushes herself in the opposite direction, often flinging Sanjay towards greater independence. As a result, she and Vijay think nothing of leaving town for the weekend with no one to take care of their son except for his pet snake, a stocked fridge, and very detailed instructions about meals, chores, household repairs, and possible extra credit assignments. Darlene may feel uneasy about it, but is usually convinced that their 12-year old is enough of a wunderkind to handle anything that might come his way.

Remington Tufflips is a washed up action star and producer/director from the 1970s, who spends most of his days at supermarket grand openings and plotting his movie comeback. Despite his lack of real status, Remington's ego and arrogance has only swelled over the years along with his waistband. Remington is remarkably un-self-aware. Everyone sees him for the failure he is, except for the local kids. Since they are huge fans, Remington feels they are beneath him but he is willing to enlist them in chores he needs done. Remington owns a trailer park on the outskirts of town (Tufflips Acres Mobile Estates and Film Studios) and he briefly dated Scabs and Sandy Dickson's mom, Brenda.

Episode Premises

Bros and Arrows

When it is announced that the world's largest taco will be displayed in a parade in Sunny Meadows, Craig decides that he must find a way to eat it. Sanjay agrees to help by launching him out of a crossbow at piles of food in order to rapidly expand his eating capacity. Soon, Craig is ready but he's also misshapen, still digesting and his body has odd angles and looks like the stuff he's swallowed with a snake stretched over. He's too ungainly to be accurately launched out of the crossbow. Sanjay unsuccessfully attempts to help Craig digest and so on the day of the parade Sanjay just rolls him down a hill in the direction of the taco when it passes by the house. However, due to his size, he just smashes right through the taco and explodes it into a million pieces, scattering taco meat everywhere. Sunny Meadows is covered in taco and the newspaper headlines read "Taco Parade Ruined, Results: Delicious."

I Like Noodman

Noodman is campaigning for the office of county animal control chief on a nasty platform of outlawing snakes, so it's up to Sanjay and Craig to sabotage his efforts. Their plan is to have Craig (in disguise) run for office against Noodman on a pro-snake platform, so they enlist the help of the rest of the kids on the campaign trail. The kids' campaign efforts soon appear all over town in a burst of t-shirts, posters, buttons and stickers. The town is wallpapered with signs with creative slogans mostly against Noodman but some are utter nonsense. Soon the whole town takes sides and gets caught up in the mud-slinging as Noodman and Craig go head to head in a debate.

Dude, Mom!

While Craig is up one night sleep-cooking (something he does with disturbing frequency), a hardboiled egg accidentally falls out of the refrigerator and rolls into Craig's bed. When he wakes up the next morning, Craig is convinced that he's laid the egg and is going to become a mother. Craig grows to accept his new role in life as a Dude Mom. Things take a strange turn when Craig gets in a dress and hangs out on the playground with other moms while Hector is convinced to sit on the egg. And even stranger when Craig meets Darlene in his Dude Mom disguise and the two shop for baby clothes. Sanjay becomes jealous of his best friends' new friendship with his mom.

Beard Farmers!

Sanjay and Craig wake up one morning to find they have grown full beards. As a result, they believe they're now adults and must only do manly, grown up things—such as getting jobs and paying taxes. To earn a living, the two decide they're going to open a taco stand. They put the whole gang to work selling delicious tacos. The Dicksons see this and confront Sanjay and Craig, demanding protection money. Noodman tries to shut them down and Maurice and Hector become disgruntled, get fake beards, and open up a crepe stand across the street, competing for Sanjay and Craig's customers. It all blows over when Darlene appears, revealing that she is also bearded. It was one of Vijay's inventions: the Facial Hair Growing Machine that was radiating fields of facial hair-growing radiation. Sanjay and Craig happily dismantle their taco stand, realizing they still have time to be kids. However, Craig has taken a liking to his beard and becomes upset when it eventually falls out.

I Dream of Sanjay

The Dicksons find an old oil lamp and convince Sanjay and the gang that it's a magic lamp that will grant them all wishes. The lamp isn't magic, but the Dicksons fool them by staging some fake wishes. The gang buys the lamp from the Dicksons using their monthly haircut money. At first they're disappointed when the lamp doesn't work like they'd hoped, but through several bizarre coincidences everything they wish for ends up coming true although the lamp has nothing to do with it. Soon, they're wishing for truly ridiculous things and fighting over control of the lamp. Once the Dicksons believe that the lamp actually works, they want it back. Soon they're all fighting over it.

Ghost Raccoons

Remington Tufflips allows Sanjay and Craig to do some yard work around his trailer park, but warns them not to go near a spooky shed because he believes it's haunted. Seeing an opportunity to impress Remington, Sanjay claims that he is a trained ghost catcher and they return later that night to investigate. Although the shed is really spooky, it turns out that it's only haunted by a pack of raccoons. But things once again take a turn for the supernatural when the raccoons turn out to be ghost raccoons!

Laboratory Elves

Vijay hasn't been too productive at work and his boss tells him that he'd better come up with some new inventions or he'll be fired. As a result, Sanjay will have to move with his parents into an apartment building that doesn't allow pets! Vijay sits and sits in his lab at home, trying desperately to invent something, but is uninspired. That night, attempting to help Vijay, Sanjay and Craig sneak into the lab and create a series of preposterous gadgets and gizmos (sex-change gun; nuclear powered socks; powdered mustaches). They keep inventing and inventing, hoping that they'll hit on something to save Vijay's job, but unfortunately don't come up with anything good. However, in the ensuing chaos, they do uncover one of Vijay's inventions from back in the 1970s: instant afro drink! Mr. Carruthers loves it and Vijay gets to keep his job.

First Contact

Sanjay and Craig think they've discovered Vijay's newest invention, a jetpack! They decide to test it out, but end up crashing it into Mr. Noodman's house. Panicking because they have to find a way to get it back before Vijay gets home—since he has to show it to his boss that day—the two friends must sneak into Noodman's house to retrieve it. Meanwhile, Noodman mistakes the machine for an alien space pod and thinks he can sell it for a million dollars. Unfortunately, it's neither a jetpack nor a space pod.

Love Will Tear Us Apart

When Sanjay and Craig play a prank where Craig pretends to be Sanjay's arms, they are accidentally super-glued together. Stuck to one another, they must get all the way across town to the hospital where Darlene works so that she'll be able to separate them. But getting to the hospital is more difficult than either of them has imagined.

Don't Be a Dickson!

Sanjay is desperate to hang out with the Dickson Twins, the coolest kids at school. To test him, they come up with increasingly difficult challenges for Sanjay to prove that he's cool enough to hang out with them. Finally, they tell Sanjay he can join their gang as long as he has a motorcycle. In typical fashion (with Craig's help), Sanjay fulfills this requirement by becoming head of a nasty local motorcycle gang. The gang immediately declares the Dicksons' hovel their new club house. The bikers boss the Dicksons around and they think Sanjay has gone too far this time. Things only get worse as even Hector and Maurice get freaked out by Sanjay's crazy behavior. With Sanjay in over his head, it's up to Craig to rally the troops to come to his aid. Sanjay's friends finally end his reign of terror by ripping off his fake mustache, revealing to the clueless motorcycle gang that he's a child.

Beauty Pageant Dropout

Megan's mom, Starla, a former beauty pageant queen, insists on entering her into child beauty pageants. Megan hates the pageants, but since she's talented, smart, and cute she keeps winning and Starla keeps entering her. Megan figures that if she can manage to lose just one pageant in spectacular fashion, she'll be off the hook. She confides in Sanjay, who, along with Craig, devises a plan to help Megan lose: Sanjay will dress up as a girl and enter the pageant with the intention of winning and dethroning Megan. Everything seems to be going according to plan, but Megan's competitive side comes out and she finds that she can't stand losing to Sanjay and Craig. Likewise, Sanjay and Craig take their commitment very seriously and also become ultra focused on winning (also they have devised a great ventriloquist act for the talent portion of the pageant and are really looking forward to showing it off).

The Gerbil Problem

Sanjay's class has a pet gerbil named Booger Johnson that each student gets to take home for a weekend. When Sanjay brings him home he has the brilliant idea to zap Booger with the talking-ray just like he did to Craig so that he can have two cool friends. But instead of being an awesome new friend, Booger turns out to be totally lame and he spends all weekend making life miserable for Sanjay and Craig.

Oh, Yeah

Craig is bored at home alone all day, so he dresses up as Vijay and takes Sanjay out of school. Craig flirts with Sanjay's teacher, Ms. Larb so that she'll let Sanjay miss school and she reluctantly lets him go. Sanjay and Craig also decide to bail Megan out of class and together they go to the big city in Vijay's crappy car. This turns into a complete disaster. Craig can drive but none of them know the first thing about gas stations, road rules, speed limits, what the double yellow line means, or where they are going. The situation becomes desperate quickly and the trio becomes castaways on a freeway island.

Convention of Mongoose Enthusiasts

After a famous celebrity is photographed with a pet mongoose, the town hopes to cash in on the craze and hosts the first annual convention for Mongoose Enthusiasts, the town is beset by mongeese and their owners from around the world. Hector and Maurice both get pet mongeese and even Vijay brings one home. Since they prey on snakes, Craig has to hide out to avoid being killed. Sanjay and Craig wonder how things could possibly get worse when the mongeese escape and run wild through town.

The Great Moon Conspiracy

Vijay is hard at work designing the knobs for a new rocket ship that his company is planning on sending to the moon. When Sanjay and Craig find out about the proposed moon mission, they decide to stow away and go see the moon for themselves. They sneak into the lab one night and hide in a container they think is headed for the moon, but unfortunately the container gets sent to a test site for battle robots in the middle of the desert. Sanjay and Craig don't realize they haven't left Earth and despite being in ten thousand kinds of mortal danger, they think the moon is the greatest place in the universe.

Ultimate Dickson Reversal

Vijay and Darlene take Sanjay to visit his creepy great aunt Helga. Unfortunately, Helga is allergic to snakes and Craig can't come along. Through a series of miscommunications, the Dicksons agree to pet sit Craig. When Sanjay returns he's horrified to discover that Craig has developed Stockholm Syndrome and has turned into a clone of the Dicksons.

JJ and Greg

A cool new kid moves into town (who appears oddly similar to Sanjay) and threatens to supplant Sanjay's burgeoning awesomeness and steal all of his friends. The new kid, JJ, even has a really awesome pet lizard that always wears sunglasses and is named Greg. To make things worse, even the Dicksons want to hang out with JJ! Soon a heated rivalry erupts, which is only made worse when Megan, Hector, and Maurice discover that JJ's dad is a rollercoaster engineer who is planning on building the world's greatest rollercoaster right in Sunny Meadows.

Toilet Town

Attempting to hide from Darlene one day, Craig is accidentally flushed down the toilet and Sanjay and Megan have to go into the sewers to rescue him. Sanjay tells Megan their mission is urgent since Craig is claustrophobic. Noodman sees them enter the manhole and, suspecting something is afoot, follows with full recon gear. A game of cat and mouse ensues. Although at first he's terrified, slowly Craig faces his fear and ends up having a totally awesome time. He runs into Baby Richard Dickson, who lives a secret life as king of the rats. While searching for Craig, Sanjay decides the time is right to confess to Megan that he has a crush on her, which leads to some awkward moments. Eventually they find Craig, who's now reluctant to leave because he's having so much fun. Sanjay and Megan manage to convince Craig to leave right before Noodman shows up, who is unfortunately attacked by Baby Richard Dickson's rat army.

Where Do Snakes Come From?

After realizing that all of his friends have parents, Craig sets out to find his own long lost parents and discover his true identity. He drags Sanjay along on his epic quest, and with a bit of help from Hector and Maurice, manages to locate his parents, Rob and Becky, in a retirement community in Florida. The only problem is that they aren't retirees living a life of leisure, instead they're indentured performers at Bayou Pierre's Reptile Rodeo.

Braaaaaiiins

After the Dicksons make fun of Sanjay and Craig on their lame tricycle, Darlene agrees to help Sanjay and the gang earn money to buy new BMX bikes by putting on a bake sale. Unfortunately, the hundreds of tiny cakes she bakes for them all get ruined and end up looking like gross brains. Undeterred, the gang still tries to sell the brains, peddling them from door to door with a brain cart. Ultimately, they have the last laugh since the gang uses them as props for a homemade zombie movie. Before long, the whole town is covered with fake brains and the Dicksons mistake them for real brains and flee in terror.